

Peripheral Labour : Studies in the History of Partial Proletarianization

Edited by Shahid Amin, Edited by Marcel van der Linden

This volume takes an alternative look at the notion of wage-workers. The contributors suggest that the idea of a pure working class should be reconsidered and examine specific South Asian and Latin American case studies. A large part of the working class in the so-called third world and also in the main capitalist countries is either free (but coerced through non-economic means) or does hidden work labor e.g. as formally self-employed producers. By rethinking the fundamental assumptions of classical labor and working-class history, the volume contributes to the development of a non-Eurocentric historiography.
