

The `People Power` Job Superbook Book 11: Writer/ Make Money Writing (Writing Is a Spiritual Release of My Lifeforce: Agents to Ebooks)

Tony Kelbrat

Writing to earn a living is hard work if you plan on selling your work to publishers who will resell it. If you plan to do it all yourself, hustle for writing contracts for functional work in the business world, self-publish and market your own work, I feel you have a better chance than people writing novels and nonfiction books hoping to sell them to a big publisher. Its just too damn hard. The world already has way too many novels, nonfiction stories and even practical books in my opinion. Sure you get a few people who fluke out like the Harry Potter stories and a few authors like Stephen King and John Grisham but a lot of this is luck. They were lucky that somebody from a publishing house decided to hype them up as the fresh new flavor of the month and kept running with it all the way to the bank. Very little writing impresses me. I think its almost all generic. I dont feel the Harry Potter stories are superior to other fantasy kids stories
