The World War II Diary of Sergeant Ross Abrams

This book is the diary of an American soldier in World War II in the Italian Campaign. He was an artist in civilian life, a meticulous man, who could draw precise maps where none existed before. He could always provide the necessary information in preparation for battle. His officers found him indispensable, but he refused to accept a commission. He remained a sergeant, though he sat in with high ranking soldiers to plan many battles. He was a remarkable man and a perfect soldier, wounded three times and much decorated. Eventually he was decorated as The best soldier in the battalion, and was introduced to many famous military and political figures. His diary is a real piece of literature. His insights are impressive.
